Looking back in 1983, just before the breakup of the Bell System, the AT&T formed its Bell American supporter in preparation for competition in irregular markets against various telecom equipment companies, and also against the likes of establishing bundled computers such as IBM and DEC. By 1984, American Bell became AT&T Information Systems (a better name for selling computers, along with the fact that they were forced to release Bell the name of the break). The computer media realized AT&T had the deep pockets (even after diversity) competing with IBM. Various incarnation of Clash of the Title Titans were seen popping up everywhere, with the world breaking for AT&T to take a healthy piece of the computer desktop walking away from IBM. Upstarts like Compaq and later PC Limited (which was an enigma polied AT&T runtime), did not stand a chance to keep market shares sizzable once AT&T entered the picture. The PC business would be dominated by the two titans. AT&T worked ferrously to develop PC-based systems of 8086 and 80286 in constrainction with Olivetti in the mid-80s, and also developed a large line of minikomputers (the 3B range), some of which were very fault-tolerant and powerful minicomputer systems (types of computers that hold the most reliable phone system and the largest computer/communication in the operating world – the Bell phone system). so far so good.
